

ROBERT MORTON, born on the 11th October, 1834, at Flisk, Fifeshire, died suddenly at Bournemouth on the 15th September, 1911. After acting as Engineer of gasworks at Woolwich and Vauxhall, he was appointed, in 1868, Engineer and Manager of the London Gas Company, at Nine Elms, and held this position until its amalgamation with the Gas Light and Coke Company, in 1883, when he retired from executive duties. He was a director of the South Metropolitan Gas Company for 25 years, succeeding to the chair on the death of Sir George Livesey. He was also a director of the South Suburban Gas Company, the Monte Video Gas Company, and the Hong Kong Gas Company.

Mr. Morton was elected a Member of the Institution on the 3rd December, 1872.

---

JAMES WILLIAM RUNDALL, born on the 27th February, 1838, died at Tunbridge Wells on the 22nd February, 1911. He went to India in 1855, and two years later joined the Public Works Department, in which he served over 30 years, retiring in 1888. During this period he carried out and superintended many important bridge, canal and irrigation works in the Godaveri, Tinnevely and Kistna districts of the Madras Presidency. At his retirement he held the rank of Superintending Engineer of the first class, with head-quarters at Trichinopoly.

Mr. Rundall was elected a Member of The Institution on the 7th December, 1875.

---

THOMAS DIXON SMYTHE, born on the 31st August, 1845, died on the 26th August, 1911. He went to Chile in 1870, and entered the service of the Chilian State Railways. After acting as Resident Engineer on the location and construction of various lines, he was appointed Chief Engineer of the State Railways, and later, Inspector-General of Railways, Buildings and Public Works, holding this office until his death.

Mr. Smythe was elected a Member of The Institution on the 5th March, 1889.

---